House located at 314 Memorial Drive, Cambridge

At "314" during the past year, there has been more activity than ever before. The pace was set by the new dining-room and game-room layout designed by Dick Stoll, and our house became the scene of a series of highly successful social functions. The irrepressible highlight at our parties, "Wild Bill" Conant and his guitar, well known throughout Boston and Simmons, always added flavor and spice.

The bartender is drinking harder than his customers

Our outlying group at Charles Street also figured socially with their Annual Christmas Eggnog organized and thirst-quenched by "Big" and "Fruit" respectively. Other more informal aspects of the year so well remembered were Woody's Date Bureau, "One Punch" Broderick, the unanimous greeting rendered Joey on arrival for J.P. weekend, and various rides in Shelby's new convertible.

Too bad they don't have any tables in the house

First among favorite pastimes is bargaining for the tinkering with vehicles. "Mabel" and "Asthma," our two most prized of such heirlooms, afforded Post, "Skip," Richards, and Hartigan more experience in applied mechanics on Saturday afternoons than transportation on Saturday nights.

Among our more serious minded athletes were Jack Saxe and Herald Bjerke, our contributions to the crew heavies, and Lou Lehman who dives for the swimming team.
